The engineering student at Duke finds himself in two separate worlds. One exists in the drab, aging engineering building which rests at the end of a meandering, dimly lit walkway. The break is distinct, you are no longer "on the hill" but descend to "the Engine House". The group you find there is small and familiar—whether taking refuge between classes in the lounge or booking late for the second of four hourlies of the week. The same faces always gather when the time has come to study. The blackboards are covered with hand-smeared chalk from countless would-be solutions to problems which still seem insurmountable.

You can come here on the Friday nights you have to book, always to find consolation in the similarly sad fate of others drifting in and out as the night progresses; and, when you leave, you can feel a little better bent over the books in an effort to survive the pressure.

The weekends allow you to put down the signs of your separate week-long existence. You can drop by the dope shop, now without a slide rule or drawing instruments, casually noticing the small clusters of liberal arts students involved in a deeply philosophical discussion over a coke, but the weekend gap is to you complete. The very nature of your education requires that you keep up with your work. There is no room for last-minute cramming. Nearly every class meeting means an assignment is due. But this seemingly strenuous requirement is richly rewarded by the lack of long-term worries. There are no papers, no 2,000 page reading assignments to hang over your head. Your academic future extends only to the next hourly.

When Saturday finally arrives you rejoin your fraternity or living group, which could be virtually any one on campus, and become part of your second world—your social life. You easily shake off an occasional good-natured remark about how things are in the trade school, or how are all the guild members, once again realizing that you belong to your group as much as anyone from the other culture. A mutual respect exists—there is little if any friction over the obvious gap of interests. You hold respect for the abstract, creative mind, the students of language and art, the ones concerned with the innate problems of man—and you are respected for your ability to think rationally, to relate physical and mathematical laws to solving the specific problems you expect to confront upon graduation.

And when Monday, dreaded Monday once again arrives, you return to your first world—perhaps depressed by the mere quantity you know you must produce before you can again fuse with the vast majority—but your select environment and the high price the world is willing to pay for the technical ability you are nurturing by your unquestionably difficult studies, renews your faith in your voluntary isolation. Then, once again you blend into your surroundings, seeking the same relief from the same frustrations through the same means as any student at your university.

The feeling of unity in Hanes House is unlike anything on this campus. Here we are, 250 separate individuals, all heading toward the same goal. Yet our oneness is more than this. Perhaps it is best seen in what we are taught. One of the basic teachings of the Duke School of Nursing is empathy. According to Wilferd A. Peterson in his The New Book of the Art of Living, "The practice of empathy makes a man other-centered. Through the power of his creative imagination empathy enables him to project himself into the consciousness of others that he may know how they think and feel." It is this keen awareness that makes Hanes House unique.

To be a student nurse is in itself to be different, for we are committed to a chosen profession from the day we enter as freshmen. All of us go through similar trials, asking ourselves if we really want to be nurses, or wondering how to ask a guy to the Hanes Dance, or trying to figure out an easy way to learn 206 bones in one night. Although each of us must meet these trials in her own way, we know we can always talk over our decision with anyone else in the dorm.

This unity is first shown to the freshmen at initiation. Paraded blindfolded through the halls and lobby in costumes ranging from a tube of toothpaste to an LSD trip, the freshmen are admitted into sisterhood of Hanes House. "... You're what kind of thermometer? ... Sing the Hanes House Song for the people in the lobby ... I, Suzie Frosh, would like to say this verse, to greet thee, Sally Soph, thou exalted sophomore nurse." White bows are worn by the majority, with red bows reserved for those who accomplish the unique. "... You got a lavalier after knowing him how many hours? ... Now that you've told me how mean your Soph Sis is, would believe I'm she? ... You stuck him with what when he tried to kiss you goodnight?"

As freshman year passes, there are more and more times when the commitment to nursing is questioned. Then, watching the upper-classmen, a determination to get that cap sets in. Often this doggedness is the only thing that pulls us through. "... You mean people actually graduate from here ... Only 168 days until capping ... Why do we need IPR—and those labs!"

Finally freshman year passes and capping is at hand. The whole school comes, each girl remembering the thrill she experienced at her own capping. "... I never thought I'd make it ... Congrats! ... Look at those frosh. If they only knew what they were getting into ..."

Now we're nurses, wearing uniforms and caps, working in the hospital. As the year progresses more skills are mastered. Then the time comes—it's the first week in December and the sophomores must learn to give injections, and what better "victims" than their classmates? "... I have to stick all of that in? ... What if I miss? ... Oh, Help! ... Just throw it in like a dart ... Aspirate!!" This too is eventually learned and becomes a regular part of our functioning.

Junior and Senior years are those where we gradually assume more and more responsibility, doing more care. "... We really have to be at work by 7 A.M.?! ... I'm making progress with my Public Health patient. We talked through the mail slot today! ... HELP! ... Oh those psych papers!"

One of the strongest bonds making Hanes House what it is, is the time spent with other people: other nurses, on campus, in Durham, in extra-curricular activities, and all those we meet in our work, be they doctors, nurses, patients, or their families. It is this time that we use to "give of ourselves, our talents, abilities, devotions, convictions, that we may contribute to the onward march of man."

After the Year of the Activists, student government languished. It almost died. "The leadership cop-out," "the SFAC bottle-neck," "sandbox government" — these were phrases often used to describe the helpless mood and lack of activity that characterized the year.

Associated Students of Duke University (ASDU) barely got off the ground, as bad luck and poor tactics spelled defeat. Students had voted overwhelmingly for the unified student government, but its "supreme jurisdiction" over students was reduced to the "power" to make recommendations, and unity was a fleeting dream.

In its first significant action of the year, ASDU banned the use of segregated facilities by all student groups. Many living groups felt this was a usurpation of their autonomy in social areas, and the bill was defeated in a referendum.

In response the Afro-Americans demanded that the administration impose the ban that ASDU had been unable to make stick, and to dramatize their demand, sat-in in Allen Building. After minor delays President Knight extended an administration-faculty ban to cover students too. This action prompted one student leader to say much later that "the most effective way to change policies at Duke is to demonstrate." It was a too accurate commentary on student government.

Some ASDU recommendations, like the one on student records were seemingly lost, having been passed over a month before being presented to the deans. Many other resolutions were lost in the murk of the Student-Faculty - Administration committee, which makes policy recommendations directly to the president. The SFAC spent the better part of the year debating drug policy and writing and re-writing a picketing and protest policy.

The lengthy discussions that rarely changed anyone's vote, and the seeming inability of the committee to get anything done increasingly frustrated the student members. Many of them nearly resigned.

The leadership malaise extended to the other student governments also. Months of work in the Men's Student Government Association produced minor changes in the social regulations. Little of note was done by any of the other bodies, and many of the top posts have now been won by students who ran unopposed.

A few things in the area of student service (like student discounts) were accomplished, but the work was done mainly by individuals using the student government as a base. The formation of the Residential Life Committee, which will study and recommend changes in the residential set-up, was largely the work of one person completely outside student government structures. The visionary and "spurring" work of student government, as well as much of the sweat were provided by Steve Johnston, editor of the Chronicle during first semester.

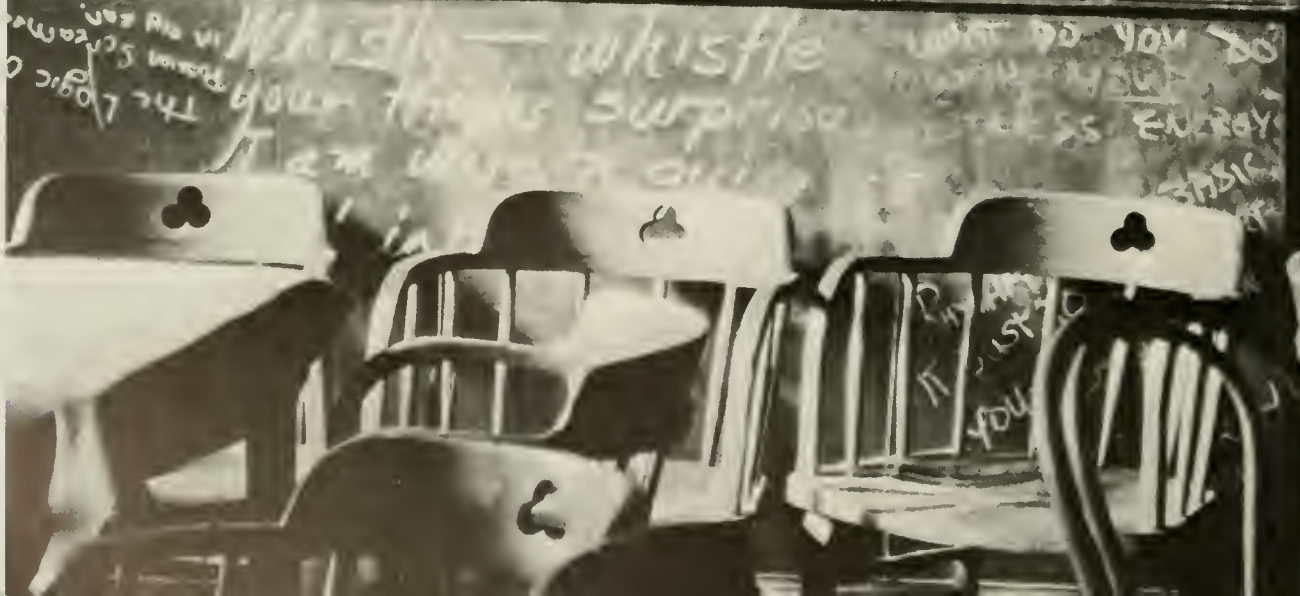

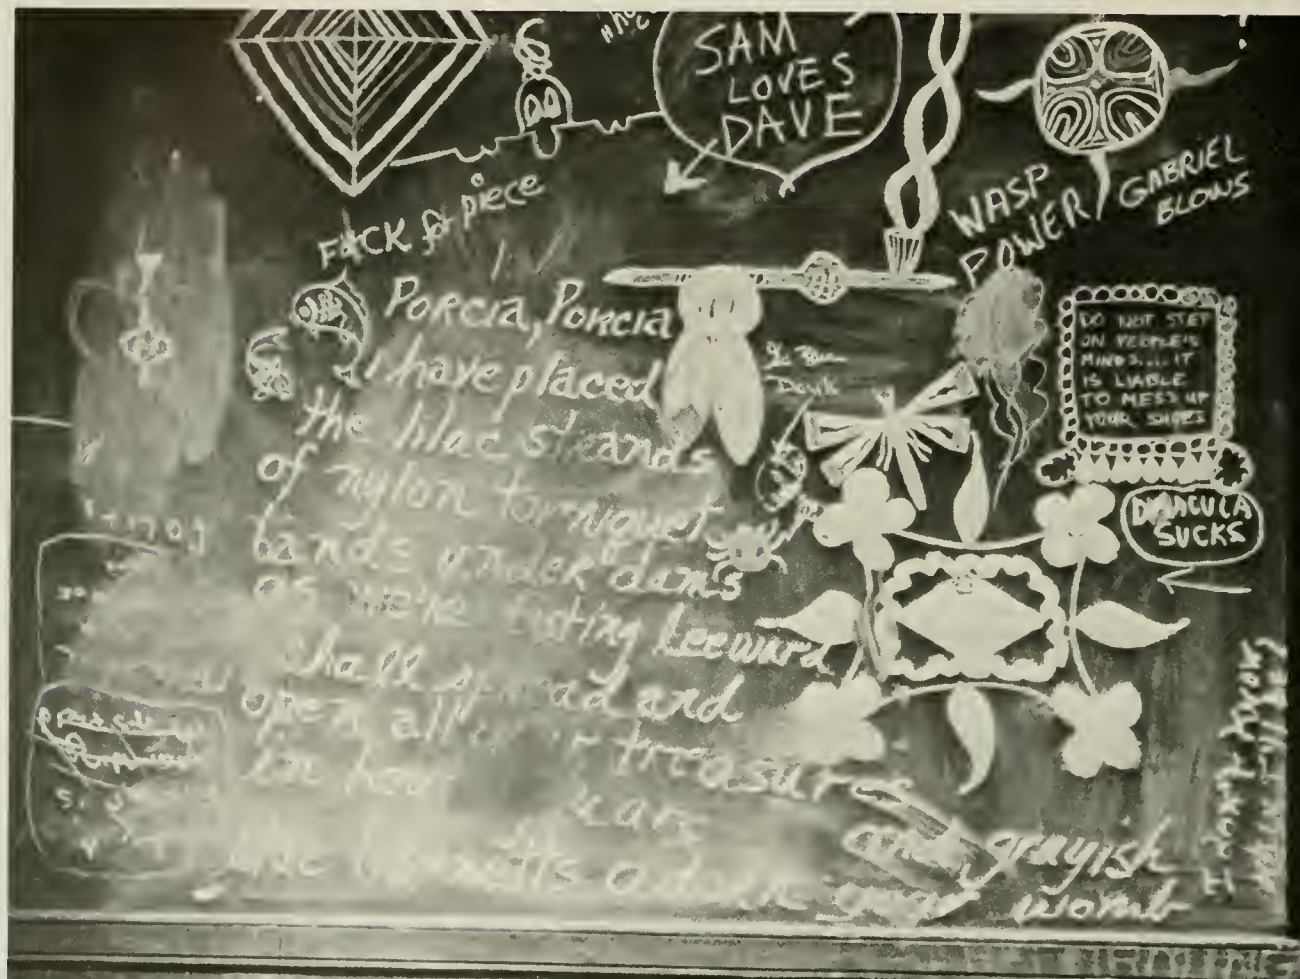

Perhaps the one thing that best sums up the year is the infamous ice cream bill. Passed with both the idea of mocking student government's preoccupation with trivialities, and of getting ice cream cones in the Dope Shop, the bill has brought no results. There seems to be a jurisdictional dispute. . . .

The Chronicle, Archive, Peer, and the Chanticleer, Duke's contributions to the nether world of student publications, occupy a unique place in the microcosm of collegiate existence. In addition to an occasional flash of brilliance and real insight, the publications produce a permanent record of the student body. One need only pull last decade's Chanticleer off a dusty shelf or leaf through a yellowed Chronicle to realize that these reflect a student body which no longer exists, one that seems as archaic in thought as in dress. As a corollary to this general evolution, a change has taken place in the nature and range of that part of the student population actually represented by the printed word, for increasing outspokenness and liberal thought have brought about a greater divergence of opinion on campus. Consequently the publications, particularly the Chronicle, which represent the more vocal groups on campus—frequently synonymous with the more dissenting groups—can no longer convincingly be called "the Voice of the University."

Anyone reading a student publication makes the natural mistake of assuming that it reflects the moral and mental constitution of the university's students as a whole. Compounding this most normal mistake, one might also assume that the display of poor taste and reasoning in an official publication must be an indication of an overabundance of the same within the university community. Realizing that the printed word is difficult to discredit in a court of law, the concern of the administration over quality becomes fully understood. Especially when one of the student journalists' favorite pastimes is the attempted disproval of some of society's more accepted beliefs (i.e. the virgin birth of Christ, the existence of God, and the desirability of a democratic government.)

But personal biases aside, it is unfair to pass judgment on the quality of a publication based only on the particular opinions it represents, because university publications are a voluntary rather than a professional undertaking. The opinions that get into print are those of the people that take the time to express them, and few people realize that less than 100 out of 4000 Duke undergraduates take an active part in the activities along pub row.

Indications as to the extent of student discontent with the quality of publications during the year were numerous. Five hundred slashed Chronicles demonstrated someone's opinion of the coverage given to Homecoming. Waste baskets stuffed with the latest Archive showed a certain disinterest in creative writing and the arts. A floor cluttered with unsold copies of Peer suggested that the magazine's attempts at humor fell short of the intended mark. As a final expression of disgust, a quaint Anglo-Saxonism on the East bridge was mute evidence that the 66-67 Chanticleer failed to please certain portions of the student body.

The general feeling about the various publications is indeed unfortunate, for the view from the inside is quite different. There is a phenomena associated with every "In Group" on campus, no matter how large or insignificant. Within any such group, there are certain individuals who see themselves as some obscure axis about which the university revolves. Most fortunately this point of view has become increasingly rare in recent classes. Certainly many merely exchange one distortion for another, but an appreciable number have begun obtaining a more or less realistic view of existence. And it is the congregation of such persons upon the various staffs that makes association with a publication the worthwhile experience that it is. This is not to infer that Pub Row has a monopoly on the "right" view of existence, but it does represent a platform from which daily occurrences can be evaluated from the inside.

If one is to believe the constant ravings of its business manager, Fred Daugherty, the Archive is the oldest collegiate literary magazine in the South. As such, it is carrying out an eighty-year tradition of providing the talented and the interested with a vehicle for the display of their creations. Unfortunately much of the avant-garde content is printed with tongue in cheek, if not out of sheer frustration, both because of economic factors and because of a widespread lack of interest.

There is a certain amoral irreverence associated with being a member of the Archive crowd. This is born of two situations. Firstly, the administration is terribly creativity conscious and is fearful of inhibiting any that may someday be demonstrated. Thus even after numerous four-letter attempts to do so, the Archive has never managed to incur the wrath of Allen Building.

As much a part of the Archive as its staff and magazine is its office on the third floor of Flowers. Despite an occasional whitewashing, its walls and floor are usually filled with impromptu truths and hasty art works, all of which give the creator some degree of immortality until the next paint job. This office has been the locale of many serious and light-hearted discussions, as well as respites from more heated debates in offices whose couches are not so fabled.

Peer is a different matter entirely, being as much a bastard child as the University has yet fathered. Rather than possessing the refreshing semblance of amoral innocence characteristic of the Archive, it reeks of contemporary collegiate immorality. Officially, humor magazines are banned at Duke, so Peer does not lay claim to this title. Which is perhaps fortunate, for humor is not really its forte.

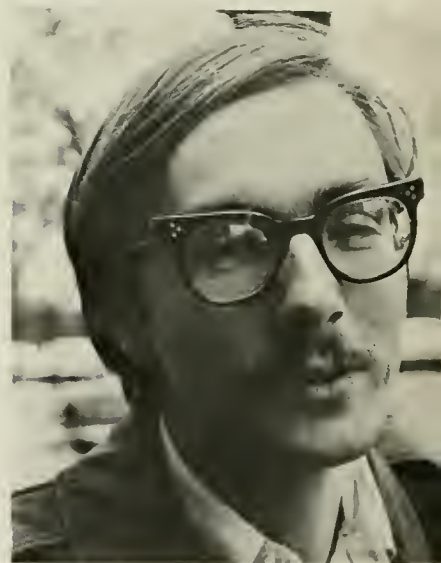

Peer possesses no purpose, nor does it receive funds from the University, and though much of the bravado of the past has been lost people still remain faithful to the staff for the occasional sight of their names in print. Nevertheless, Peer is starting to look the worse for wear and has had to contend with an even more than usually imminent threat of extinction the second semester.

During the great golden era of Pub Row "Hell raisers" prior to '64, the Chanticleer held a safe and secure position away from the mainstream of journalistic lunacy. Its staff was always well-scrubbed and All-American, too wholesome to mix with the usual crowd inhabiting the adjoining offices. This grey flannel approach to a publication was largely due to the need for carefully followed work schedules. Naturally, the only members of such an organization to mingle among the others on the floor were the photographers. After decades of abuse, the photographers finally gained "control" of the yearbook in 1967 and retained it this year under Walter the Whale, Debra Thomas, and Steve Karver.

Production of a yearbook that successfully covers the moods and movements of an entire year is a difficult task. Unlike the other publications which have numerous opportunities to find a good formula through trial and error, the annual is strictly an all or nothing affair. Last year the sterile, old-fashioned approach to content and layout was scrapped in an attempt to produce a better book. Unfortunately, the student body's old concept of a yearbook couldn't be scrapped as easily. This year's book is being carried on in the same tradition as last year's, but with the orientation shifted decisively in favor of photography.

The Chronicle has been plagued this year by errors and misinformation if not by poor quality. Understandably, ex-editor Steve Johnston and others contended that the situation could not be remedied with the present small staff. Not having the reporters to cover all the news, the paper picked and chose from what it considered important. In an article run in Newsweek, Johnston called this "doing our own thing." It remains to be seen that their "thing" was worth its cost in accuracy and scope.

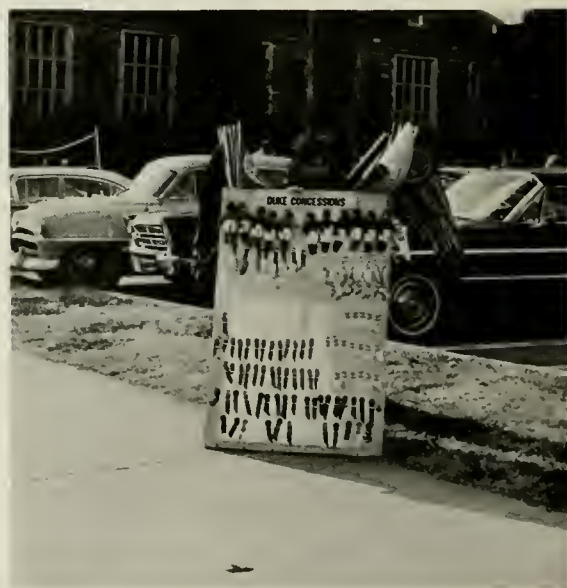

As the second semester began Johnston and Pinsky opened the Chronicle in exile and Jim McCullough became editor, keeping alive the memory and most of the policies of his predecessors.

To the people involved in the Row, even the Chronicle's more cardinal sins can be forgiven, for the Chronicle staff and hangers-on make up the very nucleus about which the rest of the publications crowd orient themselves. At all hours of day or night, summer as well as winter, there is usually an argument of some kind going on. The Chronicle office is a place where one can take a break from study to join in a lung-searing discussion or be amused by the inanities that tend to issue from the mouths of the student statesmen, gods, and liars that visit the office seeking publicity.

What do the publications mean after it is all over, after one gets his degree and departs the place of gothic splendor? During the quieter hours when alone, visiting with old friends, or even looking through the 66-67 Chanticleer, it is a variety of memories, different to individuals. It is the clutter of the Peer office. The curious quiet in the Archive when Fred or Charlie is having a study date. It is a drunken former editor of the Chanticleer doing a swan dive off a work table. It is Karlana or Robin gracing the Archive couch. It is Dave Birkhead pretending to be rational, Alan Ray and Jim McCullough making apologies for the paper. It is the secretaries who do the typing. It is the joy, the weariness, the dejection, hate, and love that make college bearable.

Al Woodall was the only bright spot in the offense passing 11 for 20 ... On defense, Biddle, Vann, and Compitello played well ... N.C. State comes out undefeated 28-7.

Down to the beautiful Georgia Tech campus ... must have been designed by the students ... hot afternoon, long afternoon ... first quarter ends with a Tech field goal ... second quarter begins with Duke fumbling a punt ... Tech puts on pressure and scores ... Duke starts a passing attack but the Yellowjackets intercept ... another Tech field goal ... last play of the first half ... Woodall throws deep for Courtillet ... pass dropped in endzone into the arms of Hysong for a score ... Tech scored again in the third quarter on a broken play ... not much to cheer about ... Tech 19, Duke 7.

At the Oyster Bowl in Norfolk against Navy ... 2 point favorite over the Middies ... First time that Navy's Cartwright tries to pass Bodkin dropped him for a four yard loss ... the next play Cartwright loses seven ... in the second quarter Pete Schaefer gains 18 on a trap play over the left guard ... two plays later he scores ... At the half, although Navy leads 10-7, the Devils have 113 yards rushing to Navy's 7 ... Morris, Edwards, Grace and Bombard doing a great job on the offensive line ... The second half starts with Riesenfeld's onside kick—recovered by the Devils ... Davis gets the first score of the half on a 13 yard keeper ... Navy is forced to punt and the Devils march 54 yards for another touchdown ... So the afternoon goes ... the defense holds Cartwright ... the offense has a field day ... Duke 35, Navy 16 ... wraps up both ends of the military.

Back home for the final game of the season—and the big one ... Two touchdown favorites over UNC ... opening kickoff taken by Beath to the Duke 49 ... second play from scrimmage Calabrese gains 23 ... lose the ball on downs ... later on a fumbled punt—a break for UCN and they're up by 7 ... offense can't seem to get moving ... Carolina marches for another TD ... the first half ends UNC 14, Duke 0 ... second half begins ... Riesenfeld kicks a 45 yard field goal ... Duke finally gets a touchdown in the fourth quarter on a Davis to Schafer pass ... the game ends that way ... UNC 20, Duke 9 ... Calabrese broke the Duke all-time rushing record ... upset loss to traditional rival closes season.

B. never had to make up their minds . . . Bedrock let his hair grow . . . Deuce was one of Pancho's many customers . . . the Eagle made Phi Beta Kappa . . . W. T. introduced us all to his mother . . . fortunately, Bernie's front seat finally collapsed. • Kappa Sigma . . . back in the fall for another round . . . at least most of us are back . . . under the steady leadership of Dum-Dum, Phantom, Country Boy, and O'whip, and with the benevolent oversight of Pecos Pistol from his nich in the power structure . . . the third floor aggregation, noted for parties and art galleries, continues to provide inspiration and leadership in the never-ending guerilla conflict that is called Life in Animal Quad . . . O'Whip moves up to leader's chair, followed by Poo, G. I. Joe, and Kemper when, as usual, Kappa Sig changes horses in mid-stream . . . a frantic fall rush led by the Little Jew with the Big Heart, is finally ended over the "Break," and suddenly we find ourselves with the best (and most devious) pledge class on campus . . . spring brings the Pledge Formal, the Beach, Joe, and the 70-degree rule . . . another short year ends, and Kappa Sigs go their separate ways, each convinced that he is a better man for having been a part of the unique existence called brotherhood in Kappa Sigma . . . another summer respite is upon us . . . Fat City. • Lambda Chi Alpha . . . Vir Quisque Vir . . . Every man a man . . . the brothers of Gamma Theta Chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha exemplify their motto . . . men of diversity in background, interests, and personality bound together by brotherhood . . . a belief in strength through diversity . . . in the past year, Lambda Chi achieved new out-looks and insights in fraternity life . . . academically, the top fraternity on campus in spring, '67, the brothers have sought to uphold their high standards . . . striving for excellence in all facets of university life . . . the cake race victory became a tradition . . . a trophy in inter-zeta basketball tourney . . . highlighted by Ski Weekend, the winter dedication to scholarly pursuits, such as the weekly seminars with university professors, succumbed to the delights of spring . . . the Joe College beer-drinking contest, the White Rose Formal, Beach Weekend, and the Foo-Island party . . . More than ever, Lambda Chi Alpha was a fraternity of men living and cooperating in brotherhood. • Phi Delta Theta . . . terminating weeks of occupational debacles and canicular debauchery, the Hearty Band returned to face Duke's academia and Psycho's autocracy . . . under the auspices of Bear and Bolter, the Blue Owls streaked to an undefeated season and a university championship . . . the ranks of our varsity and I. M. gridders were riddled by injuries, but we rallied to return the favor at the annual Outhouse . . . Social notoriety was upheld by Twitch with help from T-Bone's funds . . . Shaggy Bison roared, and a pillowless S-Clause presided over our Yule revelry . . . Hugh Heffner spiced our non-academic endeavors . . . the Big-A led the fall campaign of sustained negotiations with prospective neophytes and met with unprecedented success despite the Wire . . . Lew and Stinky led the Blue Devils hardwood adventures with help from Kuala, Gustav, the Erstwhiles and Almost . . . spring was a rampant brotherhood in hot pursuit of Zit Dog's underserved GDOI crown . . . Greek Week added more brass to our trophy case and the Eat Out more beef to our bellies while Joe College found the Bison divested in the South Seas . . . all was climaxed as siege was laid to the Parker House ending our Band's cavorting and completing the memories that fill the hold of the Good Ship Phi. • Phi Kappa Psi . . . most Phi Psi's survive extraordinary q.p.r. of previous spring . . . "here's to Cardinal Puff for the first time" . . . Ye Olde Tavern, Lazy-Acres, and Maultsby's . . . remodel our charter room—"is that a rug?" . . . buy bathroom from Holiday Inn . . . It is a cold Saturday night and the side quads are empty. The dorm windows, ablaze with harsh light yellow from aging shades or blocked by sackcloth drapes, reflect the stifling boredom inside.

In the first floor commons room thirty or forty guys scream around the color tube. The vote is close between a Marilyn Monroe movie and

The Dating Game. Downstairs, the Motown sound throbs out of fifteen inch speakers as a small group of freshmen hook from six-packs.

Down the hall the fire door opens and six juniors return from The Graduate; their minds and words are still full of its impact ("tough flick"). Upstairs, two sophomores and a senior are searching for a fourth for bridge.

"Where's Fred tonight anyway?" "He's got a date with some Jarvis girl." "Are you kidding me?? Fred?" "Well, Hell, he asked her two weeks ago in lab." "Hey Goldman, ya up for some bridge . . . ?"

Behind a locked door next to the stairwell, three or four figures are lying and sitting on the carpeted floor listening to the Doors. Slowly the pipe is passed from hand to hand and each one takes a long drag.

Up in the tower a long-haired freshman wearing a McCarthy button on his army jacket, paces up and down arguing with a plaid-shirted senior. "Listen man, you're a senior. Do you want to die next year in Vietnam?" "No, but if we don't stop them now . . ." "Bull."

Down in a basement single, a junior pre-med works his physics problems, listening to Beethoven. Next door four sophomores are playing basketball with a waste basket and a ball of aluminum foil. "All right!! Good Shot!" "Does the Spiker have a date tonight?" "No, he got shot down by some frosh for some guy over in Wannamaker." "Your turn."

Four or five of the commons room crowd tuck in their crew shirts to walk over to the Dope Shop before it closes. "Let's check the mailboxes to see if my Playboy's come yet." "Damn, you've looked four times already today."

Most houses offer balanced and well rounded activities for their members, and the response is generally enthusiastic. Intramurals in a dozen sports, weekly social activities from motel parties to beach weekends, and stimulating colloquium programs are the major components of organized activity. Yet there remains, for the moment, the freedom to live in one's own world. There have been efforts to emulate the Greek system, even to the extent of independent rush. The flexibility of independent living has diminished.

To subjugate the spirit of individuality in independent living for the sake of conformity would create an artificial system. Without this alternative the diversity of Duke would undoubtedly suffer.

This Duke is astonishingly beautiful in summer. The initial green appears sometime in March. You realize it first as smells, as new young air, but then the color itself battles its way up from still shivering ground into the grass and lowest leaves and then spreads here faster and there faster, exploding buds to flowers creating novel colors, novel odors. As if dulled by the dreary grey of Durham cold (winter without snow, winter without winter), the whole tobacco town rouses and shakes. Then, in very late May and early June the remarkable explosion subsides and it all settles to just green and warms finally to hot, dampens to humid, and ultimately humbles to Fall. But to the torpid green and imagined cold Gothic grey and brown-flecked buildings, many students enter for their initial stay. And in their September summer, stunned by the European grandeur of a displaced Cambridge, there are visions of the place, different for each, and each depending on memory or subliminal collective recollection; on the experience of city or country; on another college town; on color television and football; on books; on slums or suburbs; on expectations of Pepsi or pot; on Mother, on Father. All that may really be said about the mirages is that it is a way to begin, be it however irregularly illusory, however blessed and enhanced by a week of unreality and total society and called Freshman Orientation.

At that primal moment, the Freshmen are, none of them, distinguishable from the rest. Individuals only by contour and design, they are unknown to anyone here and very possibly to themselves. They are each given names (by which they identify themselves and by which they begin to identify others). They are each given numbers; room numbers, locker numbers, computer numbers, registration numbers, building numbers—all in a context of moderate uniformity and conformity. They meet their roommates, and then acquaintances spiral outward to include those on the hall, the floor, the house, the class. Gradually individuals begin to emerge as characters apart from the rest, different from the recording dossier of the Dean which defines each class as superlative as possessing a dearth of mediocrity. (The class is always better than the last: more Captains, co-captains, All-Americans; more Editors-in-Chief, editors, assistant editors, associated editors; more Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and unprecedented Presidents than ever before.)

Even before the departure of his parents (brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins, friends) there is a fantastic comic masque of caricatured character transformation as the freshman begins already to mold himself to what he thinks expected of him by his friends and unconscious rivals. He has his photograph taken for the I.D. card which thereby acknowledges his actual being in the university without freezing his persona. He receives the card without yet knowing that he will probably gag every time he looks at it for the next four years. It is to be his identification card, but it is by no means to be his identity. The card presupposes a certain degree of sameness and continuity. But what we learn here eventually—and something that we should all learn earlier than we do—is that no one is immutable in this university situation, that whatever the camera caught in the distastefully ugly caricature is only the past. Even if he receives nothing from the school academically, a possibility that is for Freshmen an eternal possibility, he still shall not have escaped unchanged.

The facts and type of this class were no different, really, from those of any other class. But events on and off the campus have been of a different, revolutionary sort and nobody could have been untouched—whether exhilarated or repulsed. And whether they have actually been awakened or whether their existences remain pre-natal, they still have been presented with the possibility of an immoral, decadent America; the possibility for Whites of continuing complicity in a heritage that threatens to make their own lives a dirty heirlloom; the possibility of the destruction of the cities; the possibility of an American being wrong; the possibility that the students might actually be more concerned with what happens at a mass demonstration at the Pentagon than with what happens at Homecoming Weekend. And, too, there is the Draft—enough to make anyone a student. The world comes to the campus.

There is a new idea of time involved in the first year of college, that is, a confused valueless substantive that rarely extends beyond the next assignment and the next paper but at the same time looks always to the time beyond college. Four years is by no means a constant, and in fact, they merge. What is future for the Freshman may be the present for the Senior. But for the Freshman, both the past and the future are very immediate: they depart from their prolonged infancy of dependency into years nearly as protective. So upon arrival there is a certain pride in the past, and not until later is the chauvinism altogether transferred from one school to the other. At football and basketball games it is learned that this is indeed Duke, so gradually the High School jackets, the coats of many colors, fade and dissolve to a uniform blue. And while this happens they learn, too, to adjust or not to adjust to late hours and drinking, to the lack of dates, the lack of things to do, to the reality of a single television for an entire class, and on, and on. There are the first hourlies which always seem unexpected however prepared the student is. There are also the appurtenances of necessity such as lab and gym classes—always painful and hated. And there is the year advancing through Homecoming and Thanksgiving, Christmas and Exams, which finally ends with fraternity rush. All this time the only connection with what was is the mailbox and the telephone. The Freshman moves further and further from home. All was hinted at during Orientation, of course, when the mortality of youth becomes apparent to the parents. Many mothers in a sad last effort, as if fearing to be forgotten, arrange the son's bed and clothing in the hope that it will resemble home. Both the parents eye the Housemasters to judge their qualities as parents. The son is gratified and embarrassed and tries to hurry himself into his own present which, at least while the anesthetic thrill of college lasts, seems to be very much the future.

For most the adjustment is made eventually. For many the parties of Orientation week continue throughout the years, the parties and dates are all that are required; the caliope plays for the carousel into eternity. Many already have their goals clearly defined when they arrive and study hard or play hard to achieve them. But there are those who deny the system and fight it, and those, too, who become capable of nothing but cynicism and pessimism in consideration of an absurd present with nothing but a helpless, hapless future; and those who can find nothing here for themselves to create, or nothing to create of themselves. The jump from one alleged educational institution to another can easily be exaggerated but, although the step in the scope of a life may be only incidental, still, too often the students are unprepared, the parents are unprepared, and the college is unprepared. But if they can get through the first semester finals, and if those who are hurt by Rush can survive their trauma, then everybody is pretty safe, and everybody can hope that things really do get better all the time.

There's something about a dorm room. Four bare, homely walls when you first get there in the fall; naked windows with embarrassed scraps of window shades; gaping, hungry closets; your trunks self-conscious visitors in the middle of the floor. The first week back you're strangers, but after that you settle down to live together; you nurse it through spasmodic attacks of fever or chills, it in turn accepts your personality and complacently concedes to displaying your badges. And eventually you become such good friends that you can be happy together on Saturday night or at five-thirty in the morning, and the radiator and your mind clank peacefully along together towards their common end—summer.

You strike up acquaintances with other things too. Your enemy the language lab, with its hollow, sterile smell and its aura of mass production. The union in the evening, with sunset flickering on the floor, ham with a peach-splice smile leering up at you, the anticipation of an evening's silence spurring high-pitched chatter. The heavy stillness of the library; democracy personified, it harbors the utterly bored, tomorrow's A+, the escape; tyranny embodied, it waves defiant orange cards, campaigns against lung cancer, decides your future.

There are people on East too. The ominous roll and clatter in the morning means the pitiless maid is about to enter your room of yesterday and rouse you for today. Friendly Mr. Pickett decides the caliber of your day with a flick of the wrist, and the blue-frosted dope shop "girls" cheerily hand over a cup filled with ice and a dram of coke. And Joe, Sam, or Pete the busdriver impatiently rumbles as you dash down the lawn and over a menacing chain that fells you once a year.

You've lived with your rooms, finally learned your mailbox combination, spent hundreds of hours in the library and dimes in the dope shop, tripped over the chain, and finally it's over, and you even miss the radiator.

On Monday morning the reality of life returns, an alarm clock awakes the horror of six more days of classes and evenings of studying. A stinging shower precedes hours of waiting for books on three hour reserve and minutes of waiting for food five deep in the Blue and White after Fourth Period. Outside the morning greets you with the biting cold of winter or the grey drizzle of spring. Monday is settling into the groove, shaking the remnant of Saturday's hangover and starting again down the road of knowledge. Yet every Friday afternoon, regardless of the season, the library begins to empty, the crowd in the dining hall thins and by nightfall, the main quad is deserted.

It is the culmination of a five-day expectation. West changes from a croaking frog to a drinking prince sublimating his guilt feelings in the pursuit of culture, the escape of film, the bottom of a bottle or in a funky to the soul of the late great Otis. East, seen normally in permanent residence in the East library enclosed in stacks of books, springs forth from her cocoon to glide into the parlor half an hour late looking like a chloroformed butterfly. Even those who don't indulge can't escape the careening caravan of cars or the tenfold increase in sound, bouncing around on the stone walls, into every space on campus. For those who never study, it is a clean shirt and a shower, and a new case of beer. Friday night is relaxation unless a Physics or French quiz Saturday morning brings out an hour of frenzied, grudging ing study.

Saturday is different; the sun knocks you out of bed into the classroom and back to change. Saturday is establishment day; it is football and three-piece suits, cocktail parties for freshmen girls, coed football games and a keg of beer. Saturday night is a party with any one of eight hundred themes, or an evening with the Lovin' Spoonful, or both. It is major culture, like a symphony or dance or a basketball game in the Indoor Stadium. If you are self-respecting, it is with the opposite sex and if she's self-respecting, you called her before Tuesday night.

A bottle of beer, a fifth of gin, bourbon or scotch, some time alone with your date, how much depending on where she's from and how many times you've dated her, and then the careening caravan of cars rushing to pack the East parking lots before two and careen back the same way like a phosphorescent centipede.

Sunday morning a newspaper, late breakfast and church if you're so inclined. Pro ball in the afternoons as the guilt feelings slowly rise again to the surface and then two hurried hours of preparation for Monday classes before the nine o'clock Quad Flicks.

It's all over now, but the phones on East are open so you can start thinking about next Saturday. And Homecoming's in a month or is it Joe College or maybe the beach? Reminisce over the past, plan for the future, and maybe what's in between will pass quickly.
